

Title: Competitive Network Formation

Mich Tvede

We study network formation in a competitive setting. Traders have transportation demands in form of quantities needed to be transported between different locations. Transporters decide whether to supply transportation between different locations. Traders choose routes in order to minimize their transportation costs. We consider existence of equilibria and some of their properties.